fife and drum corps and, to the low, depressing music of "The Dead March in Saul," proceeded through the winding one streets of Union Hill, N. J.

Twice, thrice, the procession passed in solemn array by the house of the fallen hero, while the banners and transparencies which they bore were greeted with murmurs of approval by the angry populace. The hero had fallen. There could be no

The red badge of courage which he had worn for a week had been snatched from his brow by the united hand of Union

Hill, and he was no more. Not even his reputation as the best dressed man in the community will longer serve to give him prestige. He is in the dust. Union Hill has spoken. So be it.

Yet as he fell another hero rose, like the phoenix from his ashes. William Neckar, the popular undertaker and Democratic candidate for Coroner, wears the wreath of laurel. Dressed in a black cutnway coat, striped trousers, a white shirt, tan shoes and with a soft slik kerchief doing service for collar and cravat, he stood calmly among the dense throng, the nozzle within his grasp, and patiently minutes dragged slowly.

All the world knows for whom William Neckar waited. He waited for John Worth, shoe dealer of Union Hill. and Beau Brummel of North Hudson County.

All the world knows why William Neckar waited. He waited to meet John Worth in a duel with fire hose. As he waited, the populace grew greater in number, and more clamorous, until, at 9:30 o'clock, half an hour after the waiting of William Neckar should have ceased, 5,000 volces, roung and old, strong and weak, joined in one mighty chorus, crying out:

"Where is John Worth?"

"Yes the tuil form of Martin Filon, King of thing Illi, arose and towered above the heads of the multitude, as he addressed them from the truck reel of Columbia Hoses, No. 1.

"O my people," he spoke; "we know not where is John Worth, and our hearts are said. He challenged our brave undertaker to meet him at twelve paces with four-inch fire hose to a finish, the man on his feet and in his right mind to take the entire purse of twenty-five plastres, and to be teed guest of honor at the banquet to be teedered the sixty-seven members of Columbia Hose Company by the defeated honseman. Yarde-Buller said that when his wife's father, General Kirkham, died in Oakland it was understood that he had left an estate valued at $700,000. His wife went to San Francisco in 1894 to make a legal contest for part of her father's fortune. When she returned to England Yarde-Buller said she brought Gadesden with her. He declared when he married his wife he thought she had an income of over $4,000 a year. He claimed Mrs. Yarde-Buller had addressed Gadesden as "Val, dear."

While on the stand Yarde-Buller was compelled to admit writing a letter to his wife in which he apologized for his conduct and begged for "one more chance." He said he was gullty of "weak, blackguardly, cowardly conduct." This letter hurt Yarde-Buller's case.
